

Please be good stewards of the public airways.

As in many parts of our modern lives, there seems to be increasing stress and pressure. There are fewer "margins" -- more information, less thought in its transmission.

More choices does not guarantee anything except more confusion. K-Love Radio station is national, but has a direct influence at the individual level. It serves to minister, not just to inform. If it is squeezed out by local competition there will be one less source for spiritual well-being. Can we as a nation afford that?
